To Whom It May Concern:

We have had the opportunity to hear Sean Stephenson speak on our campus for several semesters. According to the students' responses, he is one of their very favorite presenters. Sean discusses aspects of his disability, but he takes his audience beyond that concept, to understanding how each of us has our own strengths and weaknesses, and that we can, together, make this world a much better place to live.

Other schools should definitely bring Sean in to speak because he has the ability to touch individuals at a very deep level. He goes beyond a "feel-good" type of presentation and reaches out to students to make them aware of their own hurts and insecurities, reminding them that in accepting other human beings for who they are, students can better accept themselves.

So many awesome things happen during Sean's presentation. It is a real bonding experience for a student to hear Sean speak. They relate to him on a very personal level. I always appreciate his enthusiasm and his willingness to come to our school and contribute so much to our students' lives. Thanks Sean!
